LaPalma. Yep.
I know I've written about it in thread also, quite recently in fact.
Some years back I had a discussion with NYC OEM, when LaPalma was having a swarm. They said it would take 6 to 8 hours for a tsunami to hit the city, and tried to convince me that I could WALK from Staten Island--an island, mind you--to high ground in New Jersey, before a tsunami would hit.
The 'walking' suggestion was due to the fact that I-95 would be impossibly backed up to a crawl, as 8 million people in from Brooklyn jumped in their cars, all crossing through our island to get to high ground as well.
>Gridlock central, that would only end once the tsunami washed it all away.
That's a typical office of emergency management gem for you.
Kek.

Personally, I miss it. In Staten Island we had a large park within walking distance that was great for hiking. Two lakes, high areas, horse trails, huge rock outcroppings, caves, waterfalls. Very private. I'd get lost for hours, with no worries because it was a safe neighborhood gem.

I was in a devils den too, I've lived in sf for the past 3 years. I loved hiking twin peaks and legitimately my favorite attraction was the UCSF botanical garden with three separate rainforests. I went there 2 separate times just to get a full tour(they would in depth each area it could take 2-3 hours per section) it was jaw dropping.

Truth be told, almost everyone I know is just to fat and/or sickly. No one eats good food, meaning, organic, home-cooked meals. I get a lot of flak for being 'anal' about what I eat.
The only person I've hiked with is a local math teacher, who tutors the football team at Auburn...so he rarely has time for treks.
Sad.

Kek! I really haven't travelled much in the past decade, but very place I did travel to I'd hit their botanical gardens, and zoos. UCSF sounds enchanting.
I studied at the New York Botanical Garden School of Horticultural years back, having run a tree service for many years. Was about to enroll in Rutgers for entomology and plant pathology, but after learning about pesticides, I refused to take the Core Exam to become a licensed pesticide operator, and dropped their use all together.
Oops. I started musing. Sorry.

All is well, i just have to say that beyond the politics the micro climate of sf is astounding there is no place on earth that can have both south east Asia rainforest as well as South American and North American booms in such proximity without domes like in England. The guide are all doctorates and the do it on public dime. They even do transitional biomes like the great valley sage brush and stuff that local in the valley. It is really a botanical anomaly

There's too much convenience and too little motivation now, as with many other areas of life. Nothing beats a home-cooked meal, though. Stews and pies are great this time of year.

Don't be ashamed, just be smarter about it. In time you'll know what works, and what doesn't.
Smile. Be happy. And stay positive.
Gluten intolerance is common. As a rule, I rarely do breads, pastas, and some grains, because I know how my body reacts. Even sugars. The same with dairy.
Everything in moderation...few and far between is a good rule of thumb.
However, I love cheese, and pretzels are my usual go to snack. They don't seem to bother me.
My weight is usually between 127 and 133...but should be 120-125 ideally. I know after a week at my sister's, I'll need to do salads and veggies for a week or two, because I manage to put on weight here as if it's a given in this house. I think it's all the preservatives in their food. I love them, but hate eating here.lol

I'll have to look that up more deeply. We have gastro and joint issues in my family, but I seem to be the one who's not having issues. I've tried to get my sibs to cut out things like margarine and non-dairy creamers, artificial sweeteners INCLUDING sugar, (I use organic maple syrup.) for instance, but they think I'm nuts.
I did extensive research on this for them. It might help you avoid inflamatories. My food philosophy is civilization did fine before food became lab creations, just like we see in agriculture and animal husbandry.
If God didn't put it there, why should we eat it.
We have anti-phospholipin syndrome, (finally diagnosed in my son at age 10) with a few other auto-immune triggers. I am healthier now than back when he was younger...all because of rejecting unnatural foods.
My sibs and their kids: they're like walking pharmacies, constantly having injections for inflammation etc.
It might help if you just read the labels on your usual foods, then study those additives and ingredients. I don't think our natural body's immune system likes ANY of it...so it constantly reacts badly to them. Many diseases have popped up since man played God with our food.
I wish you luck, and will, of course, keep you in my prayers.

The comprehension in that statement alone is enough to open the corridors of perception
